The Caves. Caves are being unearthed in a way some what alarming, since many people must begin to fear that the country is about to cave in. That curiosity of other days; Weir's Cave, is become most pitiable, so far is it surpassed by new discoveries. The Page Cave, of which the Herald of New York has bad voluminous accounts, "with maps," put the Weir's traud under the ground, and the line of splendid coaches that formerly did a good business between Staunton and the cave was considered as extinguished. The Page Cave put the famous ways and stalagmites and stalactites of Augusta county into the dark. Sad that an institution of such note should be brought suddenly to grief by a rival that so long reposed quietly in its very bailiwick. Thrice the Herald proclaimed the supremacy of the Page Cave, and thrice the peace of the Augusta Cave was slain.

But such appears to be the uncertainty of cave supremacy in this country that the Page Cave is not fairly in position before another rival enters the arena and throws that into the distance so far that there is nothing left to boast of. This last cave is in Kentucky, and it would seem that it took as an insult the Virginia boast, and determined to eradicate the Mammoth and Kentucky too, and put an end at once to the claim of championship in caves by Virginia or any other State. It is announced that this newlyunearthed cave stands near Glasgow Junction, Kentucky; yet where that is we know not. The avenues of this cave are said to be very wide. A span of horses can be driven through them for eleven miles. What says Page county to that? It is further stated that three rivers, deep and wide, bave been found in the cave, one of which is navigable for fourteen miles.

This cave has been explored for twentythree miles in one direction and sixteen in another. It is reported that several "mummiffed remains," "reposing in stone coffins" (a good hit), bave been found, and that the "mummified" things very much resemble in appearance the Egyptian mummies. Our Page fellow-citizens ought to have thought of this point. It is said that this new institution at

Glasgow Junction far surpasses in grandeur the Mammoth or any other cave yet discov-

Now, this is a cave worth talking about. It "should be encouraged." We say so Trankly, whether it gives offence or not. But we should like to ask what is it expected to make out of a cave? We have never had an idea that one piece of property of that kind would make anybody rich. All heretofore known have come to grief, and what is to be the fate of the champions that have taken their places? We think no great things of them. They cannot be seen unless a man goes into them to see them. The question is. How many people will go into them? We won't, for one, and yet we are a great searcher for curiosities. Many will go into caves, we know; but when men go in once they seldom want to go in again, and thus the number that want to go into the coldlydripping vaults is diminished rather than increased. Therefore we think caves are not likely to be a great success.

Since, however, these rivalries among the caves are developed, we take occasion to suggest to those concerned the great cave projected in the beginning of this century by Lieutenant John CLEAVES SYMMES, of the American navy. He said that the earth was hollow, and that the interior might be reached through an opening in the crust, which opening was accessible; and he begged Congress to put a ship at his disposal with which to find this opening. Now, although Lieutenant SYMMES is dead, his son lives, and has within a few years past called public attention to his father's theory, and invited assistance, that he might renew the efforts made by his father to acquire the means to reveal the passage from the outer side of the globe to this inner world of wonder and power.

We offer the hint as possibly opening an easy way to settle the question of cave supremacy. Certainly the discovery of that cave almost as big as the globe itself would end the contest between the little interior basins that men are boasting about.

[Correspondence of the Richmond Dispatch.]

NOVEMBER 20, 1878. The grand jury in the United States Court yesterday presented twelve parties for illicit transactions in spirits, and one for unlawful trade in tobacco. The number presented for illicit transactions in spirits at this session is thirty-seven; of these cases nine bave been continued and new process issued, one was dismissed, one of the parties was acquitted, and the verdiet in four of the cases was "guilty." In the same report of the grand jury

Charles R. Walker, a resident of Halifax county, from near Brookneal, in Campbell county, was presented for violation of the pension laws; James D. Clay, late clerk of Halifax county, for presenting fraudulent claims against the United States in the matter of pensions; Berryman G. Terry, of Halifax county, for violation of the pen-sion laws and for presenting fraudulent claims againt the United States.

Yesterday Colonel John E. Penn. of Pat rick county, as special commissioner, sold at auction, in front of the Danville courtbouse, twelve thousand acres of Patrick county land at 264 cents per scre. It was the property of Beverley A. Davis, and was sold under a decree of the Circuit Court. Ask Professor Howard Miller to come down and show us how to live and do better.

ALPHA. CONTESTS IN CONGRESS.—Washington, November 19.—From indications so far the probability is that the next House of Representatives will have more contested-elec tion cases before it than have been before any House for many years. Already we have knowledge of contests to be made from Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New From Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Indiana, North Carolina. South Carolina, Louisiana, and Wisconsin. Of these contests nearly one half will be made by Republicans. In view of the remarkably close vote in a number of districts, informality of certificates, and other causes, the clerk of the House will have a very difficult and delicate finty in making up the ficult and delicate duty in making up the roll of the next House of Representatives.
